Friends of the Missouri State Archives

From the State Archivist

The benefits of our partnerships were highlighted in a recent, monumental undertaking by the Archives' Records Management Division. Between September 28 and November 10, the Archives moved 180,000 boxes, along with their shelving, from our Record Center annexes into a consolidated location. This was done to avoid the additional staff and operating costs of opening a third site, while providing a better storage environment for the short- and long-term records stored at the facility.

Legislative approval, planning, and implementation for this move progressed over several years, but the 31 days of the actual move relied on the coordinated effort of numerous groups and individuals. The Archives staff and volunteers from other divisions of the Secretary of State's office, the state Office of Administration, the building owner, various vendors, and two crews of movers all worked together to ensure that the move was a success. Not only were the records moved, but damaged boxes were replaced, all of the shelves were bar-coded, and every box was scanned into our digital management system; all this while daily records requests continued to be filled for state agencies.

Larry Barrett scans boxes into the management system

In the middle of this whirlwind, one thing was constantly apparent: We could not have completed the move without the support of our partners. With a variety of Archives projects, the Friends of the Missouri State Archives fill a similar, supporting role. The skills and funding needed to fulfill the Archives' mission of preserving and providing public access to the state's records are daunting, but with the support of our Friends members, we continue to provide Archives Alive! for students, spotlight recent Civil War scholarship with our upcoming speakers series, sponsor National History Day in Missouri, and offer research fellowships. The Archives could not do this without your generous support. Thank you.

Sincerely,

John Dougan
State Archivist

Friends Announce a Civil War Speaker Series

The Friends of the Missouri State Archives, in partnership with the Missouri State Archives, will host a Civil War-themed program series throughout 2011 to recognize the sesquicentennial of the Civil War. Divided Loyalties: A Speaker Series on the Civil War in Missouri will bring a variety of scholars and authors to Jefferson City in order to engage citizens in the study of Missouri's diverse Civil War heritage.

The series is intended to expand on the information available in the exhibit Divided Loyalties: Civil War Documents from the Missouri State Archives, which will be on display at the James C. Kirkpatrick State Information Center, 600 W. Main St. in Jefferson City, until May 31, 2011, and stimulate further dialogue about the impact of the Civil War on Missouri and its citizens. Programs will be presented monthly from January through November, with many of the presentations being filmed and placed online for those unable to attend. The Kirkpatrick State Information Center will be the site for all of the programs, except for the May and August events, which will be held at the Harry S Truman Building, located at 301 W. High St. in Jefferson City. All presentations will be free and open to the public thanks to the support of the Missouri Humanities Council, with seating available on a first-come, first-served basis.

The eleven-month speaker series will feature the following historians:

- Jeremy Neely, The Border between Them: Violence and Reconciliation on the Kansas-Missouri Line, January 20, 2011, 7:00 p.m.
- Gary Jenkins, Negroes to Hire: Slave Life and Culture on Missouri Farms, February 24, 2011, 7:00 p.m.
- Thomas Curran, Confederate Women and Military Justice in the St. Louis Area, March 24, 2011, 7:00 p.m.

- Jack Morgan, Through American and Irish Wars: The Life and Times of Thomas W. Sweeney, 1820 - 1892, April 28, 2011, 7:00 p.m.
- Daniel Sutherland, Guerrillas, Partisans, and Bushwhackers: Rethinking the American Civil War, May 19, 2011, 7:00 p.m.
- William Garret Piston and Thomas P. Sweeney, Portraits of Conflict: A Photographic History of Missouri in the Civil War, June 16, 2011, 7:00 p.m.
- Robert G. Schultz, General Sterling Price and the Confederacy, July 14, 2011, 7:00 p.m.
- Walter Kamphoefner, Missouri Germans and the Cause of Union and Freedom, August 11, 2011, 7:00 p.m.
- Ann Raab, What Archaeology Can Reveal About General Order No. 11, September 22, 2011, 7:00 p.m.
- Robert W. Frizzell, "Bloody Bill" Anderson's Raids on the Lafayette County Germans, October 20, 2011, 7:00 p.m.
- Dennis Boman, Lincoln and Citizens' Rights in Civil War Missouri: Balancing Freedom and Security, November 10, 2011, 7:00 p.m.

Funding Provided to Preserve Missouri History

In late October, the Missouri Historical Records Advisory Board (MHRAB) awarded $56,800 to Missouri records repositories. The 2010-2011 cycle of the Missouri Historical Records Grant Program (MHRGP) was made possible by the financial support of the National Historical Publications and Records Commission. The MHRGP is a competitive regrant program administered by the Missouri State Archives on behalf of the MHRAB, which is the state's central advisory board for projects relating to historic records.

Any Missouri repository that cares for documents of significant historical value is eligible to receive funding through the MHRGP. Last year, regrants were awarded to a variety of institutions, including local historical societies, public universities, city governments, and regional museums. These grants helped to preserve and provide access to many unique collections, including items associated with St. Louis-area Holocaust survivors; records documenting the development of osteopathic medicine; documents related to the Little River Drainage District, the agency responsible for draining much of the swampland and lowlands in southeast Missouri during the early 20th century; and Kansas City municipal architectural drawings, including proposals for the Liberty Memorial, drawings of several fountains, and designs for the zoo. This year, 17 historical records preservation and access projects were funded.

In addition to financial assistance, training workshops are provided as part of the MHRGP. Staff from the Missouri State Archives and the State Historical Society of Missouri will provide two sets of workshops across the state during January and February, one on the preservation and conservation of historical records and one on their arrangement and description. While recipients of MHRGP regrants are required to attend a workshop, members of the general public are invited as well.

If you would like to learn more about the MHRGP or attending a workshop, please visit www.sos.mo.gov/archives/mbrab/guidelines.asp or contact Shelly Croteau at (573) 751-4303 or mbrgp@sos.mo.gov. More information about all of the MHRAB's activities can be found at www.mbrab.org.

Funding has been provided to conserve and digitize the Day Book of Martin Franklin Hanley, which details his business activities in the St. Louis area from 1836 to 1863.

Archives Afield! Loyalty, Presbyterians, and the Courts in Post-Civil War St. Charles

Bill Glankler, Local Records Field Archivist

Prior to the Civil War, the dispute over slavery within Protestant denominations split churches and contributed to the impending military conflict. After the war, the theological and political differences that divided Protestant churches into northern and southern denominations lingered as disagreements over authority and governance plagued the denominational conferences. Missouri's churches were not immune to these post-war challenges, and local congregations contested their differences by waging a far more "civil" war in the courts. The

Old Blue Church, One of St. Charles's Earliest Presbyterian Churches
St. Charles County Historical Society

Presbyterians in St. Charles are one example as church leaders battled for control of the local congregation and the Lindenwood Female College in legal battles between 1865 and 1870. Case file documents reveal that the loyalty oath, as well as the position taken by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church on slavery and secession, precipitated these struggles.

With the adoption of the 1865 Drake Constitution, Missouri required certain professions, including ministers, to take the loyalty oath, one of many measures meant to marginalize and punish Southern sympathizers. Additionally, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church passed resolutions requiring church members to denounce slavery as a sin and pledge loyalty to the federal government. Most sympathizers refused to admit any sinfulness in what they considered purely political and civil actions. In response, the Louisville Presbytery issued the Declaration and Testimony, which declared, "We will not take any oath prescribed by civil or military authority, as a qualification for sitting in a church court, or for worshiping God, or for preaching the gospel." While meeting in St. Louis in May 1866, the General Assembly declared that any presbyteries signing the Declaration and Testimony would be dissolved. Despite that warning, several members from St. Louis and St. Charles signed the document, and the General Assembly dissolved the St. Louis Presbytery. Samuel Watson and others immediately reformed the St. Louis Presbytery with only "loyal" members and were recognized by the General Assembly, while the dissenters continued to claim their legitimacy.

This exacerbated the split already festering in the St. Charles Presbyterian Church over the loyalty oath, resulting in no less than eight lawsuits. Both Presbyterian churches in St. Charles filed suit questioning the legitimacy of certain trustees. In November 1865 and November 1866, the churches petitioned the court to appoint new trustees to replace those who had not signed the loyalty oath. In the 1866 case, one faction within the church opposed the petition, claiming the loyalty oath was "repugnant to the United States Constitution" and was, therefore, not binding on the members of the church. During the dispute, the "loyal" members vacated the church premises to the "dissenters" and filed suit in November 1867 to regain control of the church property. The "loyal" members won decree and the "dissenters" appealed to the 6th District Court, which affirmed the Circuit Court judgment in 1870.

Presbyterian Church, c. 1900-1920
St. Charles County Historical Society

The same issues confronted the board of directors of Lindenwood Female College, which operated under the auspices of the St. Louis Presbytery. Six “disloyal” members of the college’s board of directors offered French Strother, who also had not signed the loyalty oath, a nine-year contract as the college’s president. Samuel Watson, president of the board, refused to sign the contract and filed an injunction against the “disloyal” directors in May 1867. The court granted a temporary injunction in June 1867 and made the injunction perpetual in December 1869. Suits filed by the college in 1869 against Strother ended with an agreement between the parties in which Strother forfeited the remaining five years on his contract in return for $900, minus $159 rent due from Strother for the land he occupied on the school’s property. The college sued Strother again in May 1870 for that rent. Finally, the state initiated an action against the defendants in November 1867 demanding they declare by what authority they held positions on the college’s board of trustees. A jury found for Watson and removed the defendants from their board positions.

All these cases contain significant documentation of the legal and essentially political arguments offered by the litigants as well as of the structure and governance of the church. The cases turned on whether loyalty required church members merely to uphold the laws of the land, or included requiring them to take a particular position on slavery or freedom, or support a particular political party. The arguments also addressed the question of which Presbytery of St. Louis was legitimate

Sibley Hall, Lindenwood Female College, 1864
Mary Ambler Archives, Lindenwood University and whether it indeed exercised control over Lindenwood Female College. These internecine struggles, played out in the St. Charles County Circuit Court, tested the boundaries between civil law and Presbyterian canon law and highlighted the lingering ideological and political battles of the Civil War, both locally and within the context of larger national debates.

Civil War Archives Alive! Will Debut in March

For six years, the Friends of the Missouri State Archives have helped sponsor Archives Alive!, an interactive theatrical performance for fourth and fifth grade students that explores the history of Missouri. With the support of the Missouri Arts Council, Hawthorn Bank, and Eldon Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the upcoming 2011 season of Archives Alive! will include a new cast and a new script.

Civil War Archives Alive! is designed to commemorate the sesquicentennial of the Civil War in 2011 and complement the exhibit Divided Loyalties: Civil War Documents from the Missouri State Archives, which students will have an opportunity to view during a tour of the Archives. Laura Morris, an original Archives Alive! cast member, and new actors Alan Bailey and Mark Rehagen will bring Missouri’s Civil War history to life by portraying a number of famous Civil War events and personalities.

Among other things, students will learn about Missouri’s role as a border state, the impact of guerrilla warfare on ordinary citizens, the role slavery played in the state’s culture and economy, and the significance of Missouri's battles and political climate on the outcome of the war. These lessons will be reinforced through costumes, historical document reproductions, music, humor, and audience participation.

Civil War Archives Alive! performances will be held throughout the day on March 22, 29, and 31; April 26 and 28; and May 2, 9, and 10. Reservations are required. If you are interested in reserving seats for a school group, please visit www.sos.mo.gov/archives/education/alive.asp or contact Emily Luker at (573) 526-5296 or emily.luker@sos.mo.gov. Sponsorship opportunities for the 2011 season are also still available.

Lincoln County Probate Records Preserved

Since April 2007, volunteers have been working at the Old Courthouse in Troy preparing more than 2,000 probate estate files for preservation microfilming. Under the supervision of Missouri's Local Records Preservation Program and with the permission of the Lincoln County Circuit Court Clerk, four dedicated volunteers worked nearly every Thursday unfolding, flattening, cleaning, and arranging the 19th-century estate files, the oldest dating to 1819. Barbara Gorski, Linda Korasick, Sharon Benson, and Ruth Hammontree completed the processing October 7, and the final set of records will be delivered to Jefferson City for filming in December. This series of records from 1819-1900 richly documents the lives of many Lincoln County residents and is a valuable source for the county's economic, cultural, and social history. Thanks to the volunteers' commitment and effort, an important part of Missouri's history will be preserved for generations to come.

Winter 2011 Program Calendar

The Border between Them: Violence and Reconciliation on the Kansas-Missouri Line

January 20, 2011, 7:00 p.m.

The most bitter guerrilla conflict in American history raged along the Kansas-Missouri border from 1856 to 1865, making that frontier the first battleground in the struggle over slavery. This fiercely contested boundary represented the most explosive political fault line in the United States, and its bitter divisions foreshadowed an entire nation torn asunder. The Border between Them recounts the exploits of John Brown, William Quantrill, and other notorious guerrillas, but it also uncovers the stories of everyday people who lived through the conflict. Author Jeremy Neely examines the significance of the Border War on both sides of the Kansas-Missouri line and offers a comparative, cross-border analysis of its origins, meanings, and consequences.

Negroes to Hire: Slave Life and Culture on Missouri Farms

February 24, 2011, 7:00 p.m.

In Negroes to Hire, filmmaker Gary Jenkins explores the history of slavery in Missouri before and during the Civil War. The documentary is based on Works Progress Administration Slave Narratives gathered from 1936 to 1938, which provide compelling first-hand accounts of the day-to-day existence of those held in bondage. This unique documentary, which includes insightful commentary by noted historians, authors, and educators, sheds new light on a controversial and troubling subject. Jenkins, whose ancestors were slave owners, will be joined by Dr. Jimmy Johnson, whose narrative about his great-grandfather's experience as a slave, a soldier in the First Kansas Colored Regiment, and landholder after slavery ended provides a major portion of the documentary.

Confederate Women and Military Justice in the St. Louis Area

March 24, 2011, 7:00 p.m.

During the Civil War, more than 360 women accused of disloyalty passed through the office of the St. Louis Union Provost Marshal for their part in assisting the Confederate war effort. The women spied, smuggled contraband, passed mail to the South, and exhibited their support for the Confederacy in other ways. Many of them were confined to various military prisons in the region, some for several months. The women imprisoned in the St. Louis area came primarily from Missouri, as well as the rebellious states along the Mississippi River. In many cases, these women proudly admitted their Confederate loyalty and showed no remorse for the actions that led to their imprisonment. Thomas Curran will investigate the activities engaged in by Southern women during the Civil War and the contributions they made to the Confederate cause.
